THE LIFE OF THE PARTY!

M-G-M puts the pep in this business

LOS ANGELES 729 ~ 7th AVE., N.Y.C. CHICAGO
All the Romance and Adventure of the Eternal West in

Pathe Westerns

Interpreted by these Great Western Stars

BUFFALO BILL, Jr. a real son of the saddle, formerly with Sells-Floto

WALLY WALES Prince of the Plains, in 8

LEO MALONEY a great star in a class by himself, in 4

DON COLEMAN world's champion bronco-buster, in 8

JACK DONOVAN a real hero of the west, in 2

BUDDY ROOSEVELT the college-bred cowboy, in 2

JACK PADIAN a big, two-fisted he-man, in 2

-an absolute sure-fire bet that no exhibitor can afford to pass up

Pathe has the best Westerns!
yes!
they’re all paramount pictures!

Amazing, isn’t it, that one company should release practically all of the great pictures of 1927-8. Daringly different new era record breakers like “Chang” with its thrilling climax. And “Rough Riders”. And that wonderful story of brotherly love, “Beau Geste”. “Metropolis”, a fascinating glimpse into tomorrow’s universe. “The Way of All Flesh”, in which Emil Jannings gives such a marvelous performance. "Jesse James", "Firemen, Save My Child", "Swim Girl
Swim", "Tell It to Sweeney", "Figures Don't Lie", "Gentleman of Paris". The seething drama of gangster warfare, "Under-World". Clara Bow in "Hula" and
"Get Your Man". "Barbed Wire" and "Woman on Trial" starring Pola Negri.
Thomas Meighan in "We're All Gamblers" and "City Gone Wild". Paramount! Paramount! Paramount! Paramount! No wonder people think all good pictures are Paramount! And they're not far wrong at that. Far from slackening its 1927-8 pace, the best of Paramount's current product is on the way. Harold Lloyd in "Speedy". "Gentlemen Prefer and short features too!

Backed by ten years of steady national advertising reaching sixty-five million readers.

Your public demands on the screen ever new faces, youth, beauty in its women, intelligence and personality in all its players. Fox pictures meet this demand with an array of youthful talent to be found in no other product. At the head of each cast stands some young artist of whom your patrons have already given their approval.

PHOTOPLAY MAGAZINE, says:

"Youth, the New Battle Cry of Filmdom . . . Fox outmarathons them all, for quietly and without bombast it has created two genuine girl stars—Janet Gaynor and Olive Borden, signed Lois Moran and have in the grooming Charles Farrell, Barry Norton and Charles Morton."—Yes, Mr. Editor—and a host of others.

ARTHUR JAMES, Editor of Motion Pictures Today,

A National Trade Paper, says:

"The public is responding to the youth that now is beginning to replace the more aged leads and stars. Looking over the newer lists we see . . . Janet Gaynor, Olive Borden, Madge Bellamy, Dolores Del Rio, Lois Moran . . . all rapidly rising box office attractions, all representing youth."

"THE SPICE OF THE PROGRAM"
Free Press expresses the opinion of expert critics everywhere when it says that "no star in pictures today has made more remarkable progress than Lupino Lane." Kinograms—it has topped the whole news reel field by a wide margin in Arthur James' comparative appraisal of all news reels, in Motion Pictures Today. "Big Boy"—there never was a more lovable kid, or a funnier child comedian, on the screen than "Big Boy." Dorothy Devore—the only girl star making a series of short comedies today. Lloyd Hamilton—a favorite with millions for years. Charley Bowers—the comedy "wizard." And many others equally popular, all big attractions at the box-office when you exploit them. And all backed by the strongest magazine advertising campaign ever carried on Short Features to make your own advertising pull better for you.

No. 13 MOTION PICTURE NEWS BOOKING GUIDE October, 1927

Pictures Released Between Mar. 1, 1927 and Sept. 1, 1927
The Most Useful Book

FROM my experience at an editor's desk, I believe this to be the most useful book ever put out in this field. Heretofore the volume has been well known as THE BOOKING GUIDE. Thousands of exhibitors use it constantly. Now, THE STUDIO DIRECTORY has been added.

The new volume can and will be used, every week, by most every exhibitor and every newspaper that carries a photoplay department.

Here is its usefulness:
The exhibitor or photoplay editor consults an index; finds any picture released in the past six months; gets a synopsis of the story, the names of the director and cast, and reference to further material in the files of his Motion Picture News.

He turns to another index and is directed to the biographies of the director and members of the cast.

He has, in other words, all the material he needs to prepare for any newspaper a story of popular and local interest.

Press sheets may be lost or not easily at hand; the picture may arrive unexpectedly. But whatever the situation this book is constantly at hand to give, instantly, all the publicity material any picture needs.

It is an ever ready, every week Publicity Encyclopaedia on current motion pictures.

It is the constant press agent of pictures and people.

It is the Who's Who of motion picture publicity.

* * * *

The number of theatres equipped to use press sheets and other advertising service is somewhat limited.

But there are few exhibitors who cannot use the BOOKING GUIDE AND STUDIO DIRECTORY, and few newspapers who cannot use a reader from its pages.

"THE CHECK-UP"

"The Check-Up" is a presentation in the briefest and most convenient form of reports received from exhibitors in every part of the country on current features, which makes it possible for the exhibitor to see what the picture has done for other theatre managers.

The first column following the name of the feature represents the number of managers that have reported the picture as "Poor." The second column gives the number who considered it "Fair"; the third, the number who considered it "Good"; and the fourth column, those who considered it "Big."

The fifth column is a percentage figure giving the average rating on that feature, obtained by the following method: A report of "Poor" is rated as 20%; one of "Fair," 40%; "Good," 70%; and "Big," 100%. The percentage ratings of all of these reports on one picture are then added together and divided by the number of reports, giving the average percentage—a figure which represents the consensus of opinion on that picture. In this way exceptional cases, reports which might be misleading taken alone, and such individual differences of opinion are averaged up and eliminated.

No picture is included in the list which has not received at least ten reports.

RICHARD DIX, one of the most virile actors on the screen, and who has shown dauntless courage on many occasions during the making of difficult and dangerous scenes, did not become a doctor only because he couldn’t stand the sight of blood.

Young Dix, then a student at Central High School in St. Paul, Minn., fully intended to follow out the wishes of his family and become a surgeon—until he watched his brother perform three operations, and decided it was not for him.

Graduating from high school he attended the University of Minnesota for a year, after which he entered a bank. Finding this uncongenial he tried a position in an architect’s office, which did not prove much better.

All during school Dix had not only been keenly interested in athletics but in amateur dramatics as well, and had taken part in nearly every student production, so his thoughts turned again to acting. Continuing his work in the architect’s office he studied evenings at a dramatic school, which led to parts with a local stock company. His next move took him to New York, where he continued on the stage, only to be recalled to St. Paul by the death of his brother, which left him the main support of his mother and sister.

Local stock companies could pay but modest salaries, so he went West as leading man for the Morosco Stock Company in Los Angeles. His stage experience had included “The Hawk,” with Faversham, “Song of Songs,” “Little Brother,” and “Night Lodging.”

His success in Los Angeles was immediate, and logically led to motion pictures. One of the first pictures to bring him into prominence was “The Christian,” for Goldwyn, for whom he also did “Souls for Sale.” He became a Paramount star soon after, and has appeared in such outstanding productions as “The Ten Commandments,” “Too Many Kisses,” “The Shock Punch,” “Let’s Get Married,” “The Lucky Devil,” “The Vanishing American,” a noteworthy performance, “Womanhandled,” “The Quarterback,” “Paradise for Two,” “Knockout Reilly,” “Man Power,” “Shanghai Bound” and “The Gay Defender.”

He was born and raised in St. Paul, Minn., his parents having moved to that city from Los Angeles just six weeks before his birth, else he might have been a “native son.”

“THE TRAVELLING SALESMAN”
HAROLD LLOYD'S rise to motion picture fame is studded with many of the characteristic experiences typical of an Horatio Alger hero. Lloyd was born on a Nebraska farm in 1893. He worked before and after school and, at eighteen, became a newspaper and popcorn vendor. At nineteen, in San Diego, he made his screen debut. Then followed a period in stock and then another try at the films on the Universal lot. Lloyd became associated with Hal Roach, and made several hundred of the now famous Lonesome Luke comedies which were distributed through Pathe. Tiring of the character he adopted the horn-rimmed eyeglass make-up, to which he has held ever since. At this time he married his leading lady, Mildred Davis, and a little later severed connection with Pathe, joining the Paramount organization.

Harold Lloyd's work in his forthcoming production for Paramount release, entitled "Speedy," will bring to the screen a number of shots more thrilling than any he has filmed since "Safety Last." Daring horsemanship in piloting the street car through the busy streets of New York will be certain to win the commendation of Lloyd followers throughout the world, for even in the unassembled rushes this work on the comedian's part is an outstanding feature.

Ann Christy, new Lloyd leading lady, looks most attractive and appealing in the Coney Island and other shots in which she appears with the comedian.

Ted Wilde, directing "Speedy," was on familiar territory while working with Lloyd, for quite a few shots were made in parts of New York, where he spent his days before going to California.

While very few persons other than his intimates are aware of the fact, "Speedy" is a nickname Lloyd has borne for more than ten years. It was given to him by his father, J. Darsie Lloyd. Fitting the character of the breezy New York boy Lloyd is portraying in his new picture, the comedian was not long in selecting it after the suggestion was offered by S. R. Kent, general manager of Paramount.

"Speedy" became the Lloyd appellation soon after the comedian's father had visited a stock show in Los Angeles in which the central character's name was Harold, but who was called "Speedy" throughout the play. Lloyd, Sr., was so impressed with the drama that he soon began calling Harold "Speedy," and the name stuck.

HAD Colleen Moore followed her family's wishes she might today be a widely famous concert pianist instead of the tremendously popular movie star that she is. Even a course at a musical conservatory failed to alter her decision to become an actress, dating from the age of ten, when she began organizing amateur theatricals among the children of the neighborhood in which she was everything from producer to property "man."

She made her first assault on the film citadel at the old Essanay studio in Chicago, visiting the casting office daily for six months without results. Her uncle, a prominent newspaper editor, offered to use his influence to help her, but she refused, preferring to stand or fall by her own unaided efforts. Then came three days' work at $3.50 a day—$10.50 for the six months—and she began to receive bits.

D. W. Griffith saw her at her uncle's home, and persuaded the family that she had talent, and should be permitted to go to California where her opportunities would be greater. True to his promise, D. W. Griffith gave her a part, and soon she was appearing in small and featured roles for Vitagraph, Universal, Cosmopolitan, First National, Hodkinson, Goldwyn and other companies—much of it hard, thankless work, but splendid training for the stardom that was to come.

Her consistently brilliant work brought a contract with First National and the chance to play in "Flaming Youth," which literally "made" her overnight. In a short time she was one of America's leading feminine stars, and established in a distinctive type of role in such outstanding pictures as "The Perfect Flapper," "Flirting With Love," "Sally," the more serious "So Big," "We Moderns," "Irene," and "Ella Cinders." Her most recent productions are "It Must Be Love," "Twinkletoes," "Orchids and Ermine," and "Naughty, But Nice." Her coming productions include: "Her Wild Oat," "Lilac Time," "Baby Face," and "Oh! Kay."

Miss Moore was born in Port Huron, Mich., but was educated at the Convent of the Holy Name at Tampa, Fla. She has brown hair, and is unique among screen players in that one eye is brown and the other blue. She is five feet and three inches in height. Her husband, John McCormick, is the highly successful producer of her pictures.

Biographical Sketch

HARRY LANGDON came honestly by that wistful look he employs so successfully on the screen. He acquired it when as a newsboy in his home town of Council Bluffs, la., he gazed with envying eyes on the performers at the Doheny Theatre.

Harry's career very much resembles that of Ragged Dick and Tattered Tom. The difference was that Harry had a vague idea as to just what he wanted to be. He was bound and determined to be an actor, so he started from the ground up.

Early in his teens he abandoned his newsboy work to become assistant janitor at the Doheny. Then in turn he became program boy, usher and ticket taker. The house took up "amateur nights," and Harry was among the first volunteers.

The applause at these amateur shows spurred him on, and he soon got a chance to join a traveling medicine show. He returned later to Council Bluffs and became an actor at Mickey Mullin's Music Hall. This lead to the comedy star rôle in a traveling road company playing "The Show Girl" through the Middle West.

Young Langdon sat down one night after the show and started writing a vaudeville act, which eventually resulted in his becoming a picture star. The act lasted him through six seasons, and brought him to Los Angeles and the attention of Mack Sennett.

Sennett offered him a contract in pictures for considerably less money than he was making, but he took a chance and made good in two-reel comedies at once. For two years he made many of them. A contract was then forthcoming from First National for him to produce his own feature length comedies, and he has been doing just that ever since.

His first was "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp," and there was a clamor for it on the part of exhibitors. Then came "The Strong Man" and "Long Pants." His latest vehicle is "Three's A Crowd," and as a result he is more popular than ever.
Biographical Sketch

DOUGLAS MACLEAN, Paramount star, tried a little bit of several things before he decided eventually on the acting profession as a career. Well educated, he was qualified for almost any line of endeavor, particularly with a personality such as his. He thought he would make a good salesman, after he graduated from the Northwestern University Preparatory School and the Lewis Institute of Technology in Chicago.

Completing his course in the science of industrial arts, he promptly got himself a job as an automobile salesman, but there was not enough action in that for him, so he took up newspaper reporting. There he got the desired action, but little else save experience. Bond selling followed his newspaper career and he met with considerable success, but the acting bee was always under his bonnet, so he enrolled in the famous American Academy of Dramatic Arts in New York, and the stage and screen has been his profession ever since.

Upon his graduation from the dramatic school his work attracted the attention of Maude Adams, who engaged him to play opposite her in "Rosalind," a stage fantasy. Following that engagement he gained some invaluable experience in stock. He was in stock for a year in Pittsfield, Mass., and another year with the Oliver Morosco company in Los Angeles. From there he just naturally drifted into pictures, his screen debut being opposite Alice Brady.

A little later D. W. Griffith selected him for a leading role in a war picture which was followed by two successive leading roles opposite Mary Pickford. The late Thomas H. Ince elevated him to stardom and he has held his place in the front ranks ever since. His first vehicle as a star was in the tremendously popular "Twenty-Three and One-Half Hours' Leave."

He followed that first one with such photoplays as: "The Jail Bird," "Passing Thru," "Bell Boy 13," "The Hottentot," "Going Up," "The Yankee Consul," "Never Say Die," and "Introduce Me." By that time he was such a reigning sensation he was signed to release his picture through Paramount. For that company he has made such successes as "Seven Keys to Baldpate," "That's My Baby," "Hold That Lion," "Let It Rain," and "Soft Cushions."
Allene Ray is one motion picture star whom it required an abundance of eloquence and persuasion to induce into pictures. Out in her home town of San Antonio, Tex., when she was a high school girl, they considered her very beautiful, a splendid horse rider, and talented in many directions. They tried to induce her to take part in amateur theatricals, but she would have none of them. She cared neither for the theatre nor pictures.

Without ever having had a day's experience, either in pictures or on the stage, she sprang overnight into a leading lady on the screen. Harry Myers, well known as a star and director, went to San Antonio to make a series of two-reel westerns. He decided to find a leading lady there, and inquiry turned him toward the Ray home. The young Miss wanted nothing to do with pictures, and it took the better part of the afternoon of Myers' most persuasive eloquence to convince her she was wrong.

That was in 1919, and her first two-reeler was titled "The High Card," by "Tex" O'Reilly. Miss Ray's success was assured from that moment, and since then she has probably executed more daring stunts and participated in more hair-raising rescues than any star who ever appeared on the screen.

There followed an engagement with the Sawyer-Lubin Company, her first picture being "Partners of the Sunset." She was then loaned for a picture titled "Your Friend and Mine," in which Willard Mack and Enid Bennett were the stars.

George Seitz, producing serials for Pathe signed Miss Ray to a contract for that company, and she has been making serials ever since. She has made ten of them, and has successfully executed every stunt planned for her. She is always willing to take a chance at doing anything that will help her pictures.

Biographical Sketch

TAIT'S RESTAURANT in San Francisco in 1916 was situated opposite the Orpheum in O'Farrell Street, and at that time was the nearest thing they had out there to the present New York night club.

It was at Tait's Restaurant that Rosetta and Vivian Duncan got their start professionally. That was in 1916. Rosetta and Vivian had gained some local fame in amateur theatricals in Los Angeles, where both were born. Their friends thought they were good and they believed it, so Rosetta disappeared one night when she was fifteen and wended her way to San Francisco, where she immediately got a job as a Dutch kiddie at Tait's. She wrote Vivian of her triumph and Vivian promptly joined her.

Vaudeville was their "groceries," however, and they signed for a tour of the tanks on a small-town circuit that took in Northern California and Nevada. They pleased the tanks and then started for the big league. In Chicago they appealed to Mort Singer for some big time. They were turned down, but told Singer that some day he would be after them to play Keith-Orpheum time. Their prophecy was fulfilled sooner, perhaps, than even they suspected.

The sisters moved on to New York and were engaged for a Gus Edwards review and later appeared at the Winter Garden. This was followed by a four months' tour in the Charles Dillingham show, "She's a Good Fellow."

Then came their first London appearance. They were an instantaneous success, but they returned to America with their own act and went into the Palace Theatre, New York. At the end of their engagement they returned to Los Angeles to prepare for "Topsy and Eva." Under the management of Tom Wilkes it was a tremendous success. Their clever performance brought a contract from Joseph M. Schenck to picturize the play for United Artists. It has been as successful as was the musical version, and the sisters are now on tour with it. This has been the only picture in which the Duncan Sisters have appeared, but they seem assured just as many more lucrative contracts as they care to accept.
Biographical Sketch

A PHENOMENAL rise from range hand to motion picture star is the Alger-esque experience of Hoot Gibson, Universal's celebrated portrayee of Western rôles. Born in the wide-open spaces of Nebraska, in Tekemah, Hoot was a ranch rider, rodeo and round-up expert. Also he was a messenger boy after wandering out to Portland, Ore., which is not far from Pendleton, where the championship round-up is held annually. Hoot entered the rodeo there just for fun in 1913, and he carried off the championship.

It was a short hop from the cowboy championship to the movies, and Hoot made it at once. He got work doing trick riding stunts for the more timorous stars, playing small parts and learning what the business was all about. He grew up with the Westerns, became a sort of a star, not particularly prominent, but ambitious, anxious to learn and willing to work hard.

The war took Gibson abroad as a member of the field artillery, but he returned to Hollywood shortly after its conclusion. It was not long after this that Carl Laemmle saw possibilities in this personable young man, and gave him a contract. Hoot Gibson has been a Universal star ever since.

With Universal, Gibson started out on program Westerns, small and inexpensive productions, but Gibson and Edward Sedgwick, at that time with Universal, conspired to do something bigger and better in a more popular brand of Western pictures. The result was that Hoot's pictures began to get into first-class theatres, houses that had never dreamed of running Westerns before. Better stories, casts and the best directors were obtained, and in a short time Hoot was a leading star.

Hoot enjoys his picture work. He works with his director on every story, and insists that each character he plays be not the usual swaggering type employed in most Westerns, but that it be human and natural and that the pictures be liberally sprinkled with comedy.

AFTER plodding along for three years making two-reelers for Hal Roach, Glenn Tryon became an overnight sensation, when with Patsy Ruth Miller he appeared in his first picture for Universal, "Painting the Town." Instead of this picture being of the ordinary program variety it turned out to be what is considered one of the fastest and funniest comedies of the season, and it got for Tryon a long-term contract with Universal.

Carl Laemmle saw wonderful possibilities in Tryon when Universal's president saw him in the juvenile rôle in "The Dove" at the Belasco Theatre in Los Angeles. This was only a short time ago and after Tryon had quit the Roach studios under the impression that he was getting nowhere.

The stage had been Glenn's first love. He had started as a juvenile at the age of fourteen in the town stock company of his home town in Butte, Mont. When the company closed for the Summer he took his savings and started for New York. For several months he pounded the pavements, and eventually got a job as a dancer with a musical show touring the country. He deserted the show in Los Angeles after two seasons and tried to crash into the movies, but was able to get only a few extra bits.

Tryon obtained a job playing juvenile at the Majestic Theatre in Los Angeles, but he gave this up to return to New York and alternate between vaudeville and musical comedy. Appearing in a one-act skit in an obscure New York theatre he was discovered by Hal Roach, who brought him to Hollywood. In a year's time he was made a star in the Roach organization and made some thirty two-reelers.

Then, after quitting Roach, came the engagement in "The Dove" and the discovery by Carl Laemmle. The latter says he will provide Tryon with the best vehicle money can buy. He is making "The Flying Nut" now, and this will be followed by others of the same type. Tryon promises to keep up his sensational work of "Painting the Town."

Many stories have been written of the trials and tribulations of young girls trying to break into the movies. Barbara Worth has read a lot of them and wonders what they are all about. Miss Worth knew no trials nor tribulations. She broke in as a leading lady, and rarely has played anything but a leading rôle since. This despite the fact that she had had no previous stage experience, nor was she a beauty contest winner.

As a matter of fact, Miss Worth had no ambitions for a motion picture career. Like many others she was a visitor at Universal City one day just to see how pictures were made. One of the directors asked her to have a test made, and as a result she was immediately placed under contract.

In her first picture Miss Worth played the leading feminine rôle in "The Border Bandit," and she has stuck largely to such characterizations since, with an occasional turn to light comedy. She has played opposite Hoot Gibson, Fred Humes, Edmund Cobb and other Western stars, though some of her best work on the screen was opposite Reginald Denny in such pictures as "Fast and Furious" and "Use Your Feet." Others of her successful pictures were "The Prairie King," "The Gunless Badman," and "Broken Hearts of Hollywood."

Miss Worth was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, and received her early education there, but with the family she moved to Texas, where she spent several years on a ranch. She took readily to horses, and in Hollywood she is known as one of the best horsewomen in the motion picture colony.

A peculiar feature of Miss Worth's picture career is that she has appeared for no other company but Universal, except on those few occasions when she was loaned for a production. She has always held a Universal contract. Though she nor any member of the family had motion picture or stage experience, Miss Worth is an accomplished musician, and a graduate of the class of one of the foremost dancing masters in the country. Although she has won fame because of her ability to wear modish gowns, she prefers to play rôles calling for characterization rather than beauty, and has a particular flare for light comedy.

Though both stage and screen have provided many exciting incidents in the lives of actresses, it is doubtful if any one of them has had a career so full of varied thrilling incidents as little Lya de Putti, whose early environment was planned to avoid just this sort of thing.

Miss de Putti, born in Hungary, in a small town near Budapest, was raised as a strict aristocrat, her mother being Countess Heyes, and her father Baron de Putti, an Italian from the Tyrol, and a cavalry officer until he met her mother and gave up the army upon marrying her.

Thinking herself entirely self-reliant at the early age of eleven, Lya departed the family fireside without permission and joined up with a small traveling circus. She was promptly apprehended and dispatched to a convent for four years.

Lya decided to become a nun, but eventually gave up the idea during a summer vacation and got employment as a "pony" in a small vaudeville chorus in Budapest.

In 1918, in Bucharest, she was arrested by the secret service as a Hungarian spy. After a vigorous investigation she was released as blameless. She then fell in love with Count Louis Christianson, an attaché of the Swedish Embassy in Berlin. Shortly after their happy marriage the husband passed away a victim of consumption.

In 1921, when Lya was the solo dancer in a Russian classical ballet at the Winter Garden in Berlin, she came under the observation of Joe May, then the greatest of German directors, and was given a rôle in a picture called "The Hindu Tombstone." Her success was almost immediate, and she became a reigning sensation in European films. "Variety" was shown in America and Lya sprang into immediate popularity here.

The Panama Pacific International Exposition, held in San Francisco in 1915, was indirectly responsible for the advent in America of Jean Hersholt, now generally recognized as one of the foremost character actors in the motion picture industry, and one of the few character actors having a permanent starring contract.

Hersholt came to America as an artist. When Denmark was asked to participate in the San Francisco exposition he was sent as the representative of the kingdom. He was an artist and stage director of note, and he was to supervise the Danish exhibit and cement the entente cordiale between Denmark and the United States.

Hersholt was born in Copenhagen, and both his parents were prominent in stage life, so his knowledge of the drama is inherent. He was a painter and artist until he entered upon a stage career, which he followed for twelve years in stock in Denmark, Sweden and Norway. He later was in motion pictures for four years in Denmark.

With the completion of the Panama Pacific Exposition in San Francisco, Hersholt appreciated the opportunities offered in Hollywood and he signed as a member of the Universal stock company, where he played small parts, meantime absorbing and learning American technique. With a natural aptitude as a mixer, he became popular in Hollywood, and his rise was rapid.

Hersholt is one of the most popular men in the Hollywood film colony, and is a member of many organizations, including Al Malaikah Shrine temple, Hollywood Commandery No. 56, the 233 Club, Motion Picture Directors' Association, and the Hollywood Athletic Club. He is married, and has a son attending the Hollywood Military Academy. The Hersholt home in Beverly Hills is one of the show places of the community, and is the center for artistic gatherings representative of the intelligentsia of the cinema world.

When Robert Edeson started some years ago with his company on a tour of the country, neither Harrison Ford nor Kansas City knew what one of the results of that tour would be. The fact remains, however, that Kansas City lost a good shoe clerk and the stage and screen gained a better leading man.

Edeson discovered Ford in the Kansas City shoe store. The actor liked the looks and personality of the shoe clerk and persuaded him to join up with the troupe. Ford did, and has not regretted it since. He has had a splendid success as a screen actor almost since the day he joined Famous Players-Lasky, and he has appeared as leading man with some of the greatest stars in the film firmament.

A list of those stars with whom Ford has won his greatest success includes Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, Gloria Swanson, Marion Davies, Bebe Daniels and Marie Prevost. He has been seen to advantage in such pictures as “Smilin’ Through,” “Janice Meredith,” “Up in Mabel’s Room,” “Lovers in Quarantine,” “Wedding Bells,” “The Night Bride,” “The Nervous Wreck,” “Rubber Tires,” “The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary,” and many others.

It was due to the judgment and the knowledge of showmanship of Al E. Christie and William Seastrom that Ford was signed as a Metropolitan player and later augmented the star staff of the Cecil B. DeMille organization.

Unlike many of the leading players in the film industry, Ford is of a retiring disposition, and prefers the solitude of his home to the gaieties of Hollywood. Books are his hobby, and it is known throughout the film colony that he has one of the most complete libraries in Hollywood. Being unmarried, he spends much of his leisure time with his books, and is sometimes referred to as “the hermit of Hollywood.” He is conversant with practically any subject brought up in general conversation as a result of his reading, and is an exceptional conversationalist when the occasion demands. Looking back over his screen career he regards “Smilin’ Through” as his best picture.

EVELYN BRENT, featured player and star, became discouraged with and left motion pictures three times before she attained a great success. She had played with many of the leading companies, including Fox, Metro, Arrow and Selznick up to that time.

Miss Brent started in as extra when she was still a school girl in New York. With Priscilla Dean and a number of other girls who were "movie struck," she worked after school and on Saturdays in mob and extra scenes. And her work even at that time drew attention. She was encouraged to continue.

After leaving school she was given a contract by the World Film Company which paid her twenty-five dollars a week. Soon she was playing leading parts, but still was not satisfied. She then went to Metro under contract, but was over-ambitious and became so discouraged at the slow progress she considered she was making that she practically abandoned pictures. Then after a brief lapse she was given a contract by a company making pictures in Maine, but again became discouraged when the series of pictures she made for them did not get a good release.

She left the screen and went to England, where she made her debut on the speaking stage where she figured her future would be brighter.

But a British film company persuaded her to don grease paint once again and she made a series of pictures in and around London. Paramount then sent a company to Europe to make "Spanish Jade," and assigned Miss Brent the leading feminine role. That marked her return to the American screen. She soon returned to the United States and has been working constantly ever since. She is satisfied now that her place is on the screen.

Her recent screen roles have all been dominant ones and she is much in demand. Among them have been that of Feathers in "Underworld," that of the lead in "Beau Sabreur" and opposite Emil Jannings in "The Last Command."

She was born in Florida and educated in New York City. Mary Pickford has referred to Miss Brent as "a perfect type of screen beauty."

BETTY BRONSON'S advent to motion pictures was not just the pure streak of luck to which some people have attributed it. While it is true that she was selected from a large number of competitors as just the type suitable for the rôle of "Peter Pan," she had struggled along in pictures for a year or so, and her foundation for picture work was laid for four years before she got her first real opportunity.

When she was ten years old and a school girl in Jersey she started thinking of the stage and screen, and she was working to that end continuously, until at fourteen she landed in the Paramount studios in Long Island City. At fourteen she left St. Vincent's Academy in Newark, where she studied music and French. Then she studied Russian Ballet under Fokine in New York with the idea that a knowledge of dancing might give her an opportunity in motion pictures.

Following this she applied for work at the Paramount Studio in Long Island City, and was given a small bit in "Anna Ascends," with Alice Brady. She worked only intermittently in the East, and then decided to go to Hollywood accompanied by her mother. Her selection for the rôle of "Peter Pan" followed, and was good fortune in that she had for her competitors many of the leading stage and screen players. None of them, however, was considered as well adapted for the part as the little fifteen-year-old girl.

Miss Bronson has appeared in a number of pictures since she scored her tremendous success in the Herbert Brenon production. Among these were: "Are Parents People?" "Not So Long Ago," "The Golden Princess," "A Kiss for Cinderella," "The Cat's Pajamas," "Everybody's Acting," "Paradise for Two," and "Ritzy."

Betty takes her screen work more seriously than ever now. She is a student of the drama. When she is not swimming or dancing for exercise in her off hours she devotes much of her time to reading, and when she reads it is usually a book on plays. She is a slightly built Miss, weighing only one hundred pounds, and has blue eyes and brown hair. She was born in Trenton, N. J.

SALLY RAND, of the Cecil B. De Mille players, literally dove into motion pictures in a thirty-foot dive at the Mack Sennett studios. But for her ability as a diver she may never have had a chance to join up with the De Mille stock company. Mr. De Mille now says of her that her piquancy, coupled with her rare beauty of face and form, and her ability as an actress are bound to make her a tremendously popular screen personality.

After playing during two school vacations with a Kansas City stock company, Miss Rand went to New York and danced a bit about the cabarets. Then she got a chance to tour in vaudeville with Gus Edwards. Following this a season of dancing with a partner was interrupted in Sacramento, Cal., where she was stricken with appendicitis and operated upon. She decided to visit Hollywood during her convalescence, and she went out to the Sennett studio to see what a motion picture studio looked like.

Mack Sennett was making one of his comedies at the time and he spied Miss Rand. She appealed to him as a picture possibility, and he asked her if she could dive. She could, and she did as soon as the change into a bathing suit could be made. The Sennett camera men shot her first dive, one of thirty feet, and she was used in the current picture. Thus, plunging head first into a swimming pool, Sally made her screen debut.

Miss Rand received valuable comedy training in her eight months of Hal Roach stock and four months with Christie. Then Cecil De Mille saw her and gave her a part in "The Golden Bed." Since joining the De Mille-Metropolitan Company Miss Rand has had other important parts in "Brave-heart," "Gigolo," "The Last Frontier," "Getting Gertie's Garter," "The King of Kings," "The Fighting Eagle," "His Dog," and has appeared in leading roles in "Galloping Fury" for Universal, "The Night of Love" for United Artists and "Woman Against the World" for Tiffany-Stahl.

Sally Rand's father is a Lieutenant-Colonel in the army. She was born in Winchester, Ky. She is much envied in Hollywood now, with an opportunity to step to stardom under the tutelage of the noted star maker.

Unless all signs and prognostications fail, the name of Maria Corda will be as well known to motion picture fans of the United States as that of any of the leading stars. Maria Corda is a comparative newcomer. She was brought here only recently from Hungary under contract with First National, in which company's pictures she is now being featured.

Miss Corda was one of the most popular of all European players before she departed for America. Extremely beautiful, she is known the length and breadth of Europe, both as a dancer and a motion picture actress. She was declared one of the three most popular European cinema actresses.

Miss Corda is as well educated as she is talented and she had a leaning toward the stage and pictures from early childhood. She was born in Budapest in 1902, the daughter of a well-known concert violinist, and she was educated in the Convent of the Sacred Heart. After leaving the convent she took up ballet dancing and appeared with the Opera Royale ballet in Budapest, after which she went to Rome. She returned shortly to Vienna, where her beauty won her a place in motion pictures. She appeared in Vienna for a year and then was signed with UFA, the great German motion picture concern.

In private life Miss Corda is Mrs. Alexander Korda. Her husband is a noted director and has directed her in most of her pictures. It was he who handled the megaphone for her on "Her Dancing Partner," and "A Modern Du Barry," both UFA productions that scored heavily throughout Europe. "The Last Days of Pompeii," a Cines production made in Rome, is another of her successes.

Miss Corda is described as essentially a comedienne. Her most recent comedies in Europe are "Madame Wants No Children" and "The Lost Love." Richard A. Rowland, general manager of First National, brought Miss Corda to America, and he brought her husband with her to direct her in "The Private Life of Helen of Troy," which is expected to create a sensation.

BUDDY ROOSEVELT came naturally by his ability both as an actor and as a Western star. He is a true product of the Western ranch, and he is the son of Charlotte Spooner, well-known as an opera singer. Buddy was born and raised in Meeker, Col., and his father was judge in Rio Blanco county, and known throughout the Rocky Mountain district as "Sandy."

Buddy learned to ride before he learned anything else. During his career in the public schools in Meeker he rode nine miles to and from school daily. And they hadn't a bronc too tough for him to ride by the time he got out of school. Shortly after he joined the C. B. Irwin Wild West Show he was identified by the cowboys as "the ridin' fool," a much cherished cowboy compliment.

Despite his ability in the saddle, Buddy found it hard to get work in Hollywood, and was forced to take a job as dishwasher in the Methodist Hospital in Los Angeles. Later he was engaged to double in stunts at Inceville for some of the leading feminine stars of the day, among them Dorothy Dalton, Louise Glaum, Enid Markey, Billie Burke, Bessie Barriscale and others.

Following a term in the navy during the war, Buddy returned to Los Angeles and took a job chopping wood at $3.50 a day, but shortly succeeded in getting a job at Universal City as all-around cowboy and stunt man. Eventually an offer came from Norman Dawn, who was going to Alaska to make a picture. It was "The Lure of the Yukon," and Buddy was offered $350 a week.

His rise was rapid after that, for he met Lester F. Scott, Jr., who was looking about for a likely young Western star. The Scott-Roosevelt association brought much prosperity and developed young Roosevelt into a leader in his line.

LUCIEN PRIVAL, heavy and character actor, was born in New York City and educated in Germany, whither he was taken when a boy by his parents. His father is of French birth while his mother is a native of Berlin, Germany, and the Franco-Germanic influence has given him a wonderful artistic bent which was manifested early in his life. He started his film career in Germany in “Die Kleptomaniac.”

His brother is an artist, and it was intended that Lucien should follow in his footsteps, since he manifested ability in that direction. But acting was always his ambition, and despite the objections of his grandmother he finally went on the stage in Berlin. His mother had always wished to act but had been forbidden to follow the profession. After touring Germany with repertoire companies, young Prival and his family returned to New York. The property and money of the Privals had been confiscated by the Germans during the war, and there was much difficulty therewith.

Returning to New York, Prival posed for his brother who was a noted painter and did bits in motion pictures. His first picture engagement here was in “Velvet Fingers,” a Pathe serial. He was preparing to go back on the stage when he received a call to play in Al Rockett’s production for First National Pictures, called “Puppets,” starring Milton Sills. He made a success in this and other films followed, including “The Great Deception,” a Robert Kane production; “Just Another Blonde” and “High Hat,” also a Kane picture for First National.

Prival specializes in character rôles, old men and abnormal and subnormal types, which he loves to portray. He is also a writer on rather obstruse subjects—philosophy, against a background of allegory, psycho-analysis, and so on.

He is 5 feet 11 inches in height, weighs 152 pounds, and has brown eyes and hair. His manner is most agreeable, and he has an engaging personality, but his screen favorite characterizations equally partake of the unusual and semi-grotesque.

TOM TYLER, leading Western star at the F. B. O. studios, had more than his share of hardships before winning success as a motion picture actor. He wanted to become a star in the worst way, so he spent his savings for a correspondence school course in motion picture acting. When the course was completed his roll was depleted and he was nowhere, so he took a job driving a truck and busied himself at other odd tasks.

Born in New York State, Tom started for Hollywood, and was three years arriving there, as he had to work his way out. In Hollywood he got a little work as an extra, but not enough to keep him going, so he shipped on a lumber schooner for Seattle. Returning later to Hollywood he got a job from Cecil B. DeMille in the property department. He didn't like that, so he quit and did extra work for two years.

Young Tyler became the champion weight lifter when he was invited to join the Los Angeles Athletic Club, and his wonderful physique attracted attention. He got a job with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and was given work in "Ben-Hur." Then followed a role in Elinor Glyn's "The Only Thing." He was immediately placed under contract at a fair salary.

After several pictures Tom heard that a new Western star was wanted at the F. B. O. studios. The drawback was that he didn't know how to ride a horse, so he went to a ranch in Arizona and became an expert horseman. When he returned he was given a screen test by F. B. O., and soon after was signed to a five-year contract to play Westerns. For two years he worked there making sixteen Western pictures, which always took rank with those of Fred Thomson. Recently Thomson finished his work at F. B. O., and Tyler became the premier Western star at this studio.

His first picture under his "ace" contract was "The Flying U Ranch," and it was a successful one. Many others are now being mapped out for him. Among others that have added to the fame of the young star were: "Sonora Kid," "Splitting the Breeze," "Cyclone of the Range," and "The Gambler's Game." He also scored heavily in the "Fighting Blood" series.

HENRY HENIGSON, general manager of Universal Studios, exemplifies the value of a newspaper want ad. He broke into the industry through that medium, and he worked himself up to one of the leading executives in filmdom. So both Carl Laemmle, President of Universal, and Henigson appreciate the value of a want ad.

Henigson was a traveling man, whose home was in New York, and he was tired of traveling. So he answered a Universal want ad in the New York papers and he got a job—traveling. He thought he had traveled extensively before he joined up with Universal, but he learned that he had hardly started his journey.

He really went to Universal at the home office in New York as a book-keeper. But he was not long juggling figures and bending over ledgers in his home town. He was too good a book-keeper, so he was made auditor for Universal's Eastern Division, and then was named organizer, which meant constant traveling.

In 1921 Henigson was sent to South America, Central America and the West Indies to organize or reorganize Universal exchanges and to devise ways and means of building up the company's foreign business. He succeeded so well in his work that in 1922 he was sent to England, where in London, under E. J. Smith, he laid the foundation and later put into working form the European Motion Picture Company, Ltd., for the distribution of Universal pictures.

The results were so satisfactory to Mr. Laemmle that Henigson was made general manager of all Universal business in Continental Europe in 1925. So he kept on traveling continuously throughout Europe. After a year of this it happened that Carl Laemmle figured him a good possibility to put in charge of the great studio at Universal City, and he thought of Henigson.

Henigson started to travel again, but this was to be his last trip for some time. His sailing orders carried him to the studio at Universal City, where he is in full charge of that famous motion picture making plant. There are few executives in the business who have as wide a working knowledge as he in the production and distribution of pictures and the multitudinous angles that go with them.

BOX-OFFICE records, production cost records and records of all descriptions have been claimed in motion pictures, but Edward J. Montagne, Scenario Editor-in-Chief of Universa Pictures Corporation, probably has a record that has rarely if ever been equaled, and he has never taken the trouble to claim it. Among his many outstanding achievements in the motion picture industry is the fact that he has written and had produced over 350 screen stories, and in between times he has adapted 250 plays and books. There are probably few motion picture houses in the United States that have not shown his product.

Montagne was born in London, England, and educated at Boys' High School in Brooklyn, N. Y. Like many others who have made big successes in the picture industry, he is a product of the newspaper field. He had wide experience as a newspaper reporter and editor. He started his career on the scenario staff at the old Vitagraph Studios in Brooklyn, and afterwards became scenario editor, in which capacity he was also later connected with Selznick. He has written original stories and screen plays for practically every prominent star in the business, including Mary Pickford, Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, Corinne Griffith, Colleen Moore, Reginald Denny and Laura La Plante.

For the past three or four years Montagne has served in an executive capacity with various of the larger companies. He has been chief supervising editor at Universal for a good part of that time, and for the past two years or more has supervised practically all of the important stories made by this concern, including the Reginald Denny and Laura La Plante product. He has just completed the adaptation and continuity for "The Big Gun," which is to be one of Universal's special pictures for next year.

Montagne is acknowledged as a leading authority on screen stories and entertainment values, and is one of the best-liked executives in Hollywood.

To be one of the youngest and withal one of the greatest executives in the motion picture industry is the distinction that rests lightly on the shoulders of William Sistrom, general manager of the DeMille Studio.

He is short in stature and his dynamic personality is a dominating influence in production matters. His ability to judge screen stories is almost uncanny and his knowledge of box office values is rarely questioned. That is why he was much sought when new projects were launched.

Sistrom's first important work in the motion picture industry was that of building Universal's Fort Lee Laboratories and Studios. Soon thereafter at the request of Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, he came West and made a survey of Universal City. He later succeeded H. O. Davis as general manager at Universal City and attained a remarkable success there.

When William Randolph Hearst decided to go in for the production of feature pictures he looked the field over thoroughly for a competent executive to place in charge of Cosmopolitan productions. Sistrom was Hearst's ultimate selection. The first Hearst production after Sistrom was in charge was Frank Borzage's "Humoresque."

When Metropolitan Pictures Corporation was organized, William Sistrom was appointed General Manager of production as well as studio executive and later Cecil DeMille appointed him General Manager of the DeMille Studio in Culver City. He has been identified with a large number of successes.

Such pictures as "The King of Kings," "The Angel of Broadway," "The Wreck of the Hesperus," "Forbidden Woman," "My Friend From India," "The Main Event" and "The Fighting Eagle" are only a few of many pictures completed under Sistrom's regime.

The fact that William Sistrom has achieved remarkable success has not changed his personality. He is equally popular with his brother executives at the studio as he is with the laborer who comes under his supervision. This is due to his ability to judge men as well as pictures. It is truthfully said that he is one of the most popular men in studio work.

FRANK TUTTLE, Paramount director, laid the foundation for his picture work while a student at Yale University. He, with Charles Andrew Merz, a classmate, wrote a dramatization of Sir Walter Scott's "Quentin Durward," which was the first play written by undergraduates to be presented by the university dramatic association.

With his graduation, Tuttle turned to literary work and the stage for a livelihood. He became assistant editor of Vanity Fair, and edited the dramatic pages. Following that, in 1917, he became press agent for the Metropolitan Musical Bureau, which handled a number of noted artists. During the war he served on the Committee on Public Information under Ernest Poole, the novelist. Walter Wanger hired Tuttle as a continuity writer for Paramount in 1919, and he made good from the start. His first picture in the capacity of continuity writer was "The Kentuckians." When that was finished he worked on the continuity of Thomas Meighan's picture, "The Conquest of Canaan."

Then the Paramount Long Island studio closed and Tuttle organized the Film Guild, an organization of young New Yorkers, which made five pictures in which Glenn Hunter was starred. These were known as Frank Tuttle Productions, and were directed by Tuttle. They were "The Cradle Buster," "Second Fiddle," "Youthful Cheaters," "Puritan Passions" and "Grit."

When the Film Guild broke up Tuttle directed two of the Yale University "Chronicles of America" short films, and then returned to Paramount to become a director for that company. His first Paramount picture was "Dangerous Money." Then followed in succession "Miss Bluebeard," "A Kiss in the Dark," "The Manicure Girl," "The Lucky Devil," "Lovers in Quarantine," "The American Venus," "The Untamed Lady," "Kid Boots," "Love 'Em and Leave 'Em," "Blind Alleys" and "Time to Love."

Quite an imposing array of pictures, that, and Tuttle feels he has just started on his career. He has been in Hollywood only a comparatively short time, and before he leaves there he expects to do bigger things. He likes "Kid Boots" better than any picture he has made.

JOHN S. ROBERTSON, one of the leading directors of the screen industry, refused to be a screen villain, so he became a director. Long a stage star and matinee idol he fell into ill health and tired of the rigors of the road, so he applied at the old Vitagraph studio in Brooklyn in 1915 for picture work.

The man who had played the hero for years photographed like a villain but, as he drew the line at being a screen scoundrel, he applied for a job directing and got it. Today, with health restored he rates as one of the six best directors in pictures.

Robertson was a real matinee idol of his day. He played opposite Maude Adams in “L'Aiglon” and he was leading man for Rose Stahl in “Maggie Pepper.” He appeared in productions of Charles Frohman and Henry B. Harris and he headed the famous Murray Hill Stock Company.

But with all of his success on the speaking stage he was not as successful as he has been with the direction of pictures. He has directed some of the best of them and with fine taste and keen intelligence. And withal he is one of the most popular men in filmdom.

Robertson has directed for a number of the leading companies. He has made photoplays for Famous Players, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Inspiration, First National and others. He directed John Barrymore in “Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde.” Others of the famous stars he has directed are Lillian Gish, Dorothy Gish, Elsie Ferguson, Mary Pickford and Richard Barthelmess. With the last named he made “Classmates,” “The Enchanted Cottage,” “Shore Leave,” “The Bright Shawl” and “Soul Fire.” Also among his successes were “Annie Laurie,” “Captain Salvation,” “The Road to Romance.”

Mr. Robertson was born in London, Ontario, Canada and was educated at St. Thomas, Ontario. He started his stage career with two years in stock. His wife is Josephine Lovett, who also had wide experience on the speaking stage. She is eminently successful as a writer for the screen now and has written practically all of the adaptations for Mr. Robertson’s productions.

Motion picture stars are not the only ones to claim interesting backgrounds.

Fred Niblo, "Ben-Hur" director, came to the screen after a long career on the stage, which included appearances in every English-speaking country in the world. He was born in York, Neb. His mother was a French woman, and his father, who was a captain in the Civil War, was wounded at the Battle of Gettysburg. His grandfather was killed on the battlefield of France, and his forefathers were in Napoleon's Army of Occupation in Moscow.

A soldier of fortune in his youth, Mr. Niblo invaded the sacred precincts of India and China. He has appeared by command before royalty. He has talked with cannibals in the Solomon Islands, lived in Zulu villages, slept in the tent of an Arab chief in the Nubian desert, explored in the swamps of Uganda, photographed the African jungle, and risked a term in Siberia for taking the only moving pictures ever made within the walls of the sacred Kremlin in Moscow, with which he toured this country as a lecturer.

Mr. Niblo was financially interested with George M. Cohan in his first independent theatrical ventures. After this he went on the stage, playing in musical comedies, comedies and dramas. He has written and produced a number of successful plays, and has starred in "Hit-The-Trail-Holliday," and "The Fortune Hunters." He first entered motion pictures as a director in 1918 for Thomas Ince. His first picture was "The Marriage Ring," with Enid Bennett, his wife, and Jack Holt.

Among his most famous pictures are "The Mark of Zorro," "Blood and Sand," "The Three Musketeers," "The Famous Mrs. Fair," "Mother O'Mine," "The Red Lily," "The Temptress," "Ben-Hur" and "Camille." "The Enemy," with Lillian Gish, has not been released as yet. Among the stars he has directed are: Norma Talmadge, Douglas Fairbanks, Lillian Gish, Ramon Novarro, May McAvoy, Barbara LaMarr, Enid Bennett, Antonio Moreno, Gilbert Roland, Adolphe Menjou, Ralph Forbes, Greta Garbo, etc. He has been president of the Directors' Association and vice-president of the M. P. Academy of Arts and Sciences.

Biographical Sketch

JOHN M. STAHL, supervising production of the Tiffany-Stahl Production, stepped into the role of motion picture director as, what would be termed in baseball, a pinch hitter. And as a pinch hitter he delivered his first time at bat with a picture that scored a much-needed run. He was on location in Canada at the time as an actor with a troupe of actors and the director was suddenly stricken ill. Stahl was given the opportunity of completing the scenes as director, and he has been a very successful director ever since.

Born and educated in New York, Stahl began his theatrical career in 1909, playing bits on the legitimate stage in stock companies. He afterwards rose to greater heights on the speaking stage, and then assumed his first directorial effort in pictures in 1914, after having played for a year in pictures. "The Boy and the Law" was his first picture, and his talent in the directorial line was proven when it ran at the New York Theatre on Broadway for six weeks. His next picture was "The Lincoln Cycle," and it ran for eight weeks at the Globe Theatre on Broadway.

Stahl became affiliated with Mayer on a franchise basis, making Stahl productions for First National release. He joined Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer at the time of the merger, and was regarded one of their leading producers.

Efforts of the Tiffany Company lately were successful in persuading Stahl to join them as executive head of production, and the company name was changed to Tiffany-Stahl Productions. In allying himself with the Tiffany organization, Stahl becomes one of the owners and holds the title of Vice-President and Supervising Producer. It is a happy union and is expected to be productive of excellent results.

MONTA BELL, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer director, is comparatively a newcomer to the motion picture industry. His first experience with pictures came in 1922, when Charles Chaplin made him assistant director at the Chaplin Studios. He served as literary advisor in the making of "A Woman of Paris."

Bell had had some previous experience with the speaking stage. He had been producer, director and actor with the Garrick Players, a theatrical group in Washington, D. C., and had produced for several stock companies in the Eastern and Southwestern States, but the greatest part of his time had been devoted to newspaper work. He was a seasoned newspaper man, had been editor and publisher of the Washington Herald, and editor of McClure's Newspaper Syndicate, as well as serving in various other editorial capacities.

Bell was born in Washington, D. C., in 1891, and was educated at the Washington high schools, after which he took up his newspaper work.

Following his association with Chaplin, Bell directed "Broadway After Dark" for Harry Rapf, which first brought him into prominence as a director. He also made "How To Educate A Wife" for Warner Brothers. These two productions resulted in his contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, for whom he has made a series of pictures, including "The Snob," "Lady of the Night," Norma Shearer's first starring pictures, "Pretty Ladies," "Lights of Old Broadway," Ibanez' "Torrent," "The Boy Friend," "Upstage."

Bell has also made, for Famous Players-Lasky, "Life of Barnum" and "The King on Main Street," "After Midnight" and "Man, Woman and Sin," the latter starring John Gilbert with Jeanne Eagles, for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Although he is at present engrossed in his directorial career, Bell prefers to act, and the theatre is his favorite hobby and pastime. He also enjoys reading, and reads anything and everything. He is six feet and three inches tall, weighs one hundred and eighty pounds, and has blue eyes and brown hair. He lives in Hollywood, drives a Packard car and owns a valuable police dog.

SAM WOOD has had much more success prospecting for motion picture stars than he had with the opening of the Reno, Nev., gold rush around 1900. He was among the thousands who hit the trail for Reno, and he spent a year there prospecting, but he was not among the lucky ones. He did strike a couple of rich veins, however, when he launched Gloria Swanson and Jackie Coogan on their starring careers.

Wood directed Jackie in “Peck’s Bad Boy,” which started the youth on the road to fame and fortune, and he directed Miss Swanson in “The Great Moment,” the Elinor Glyn story that made a star of that popular player. The Paramount Junior Stars were also started on their screen careers when Wood directed them in “Fascinating Youth.”

It was with the idea of becoming an investment broker that Wood went to Los Angeles. There was a great boom on there at that time, as there was in Reno in 1900, and he saw a chance to profit through it. It was not long, of course, before he became interested in pictures. He started in the film industry as an actor in “A Gentleman of Leisure,” produced by Famous Players-Lasky. He felt qualified in that direction, as he had participated in amateur theatricals earlier in life.

From acting he branched out into directing, and he has had more than his share of success ever since. He has made pictures for the leading companies, including Famous Players, M-G-M and First National, and they have been good pictures.

There are few directors who can boast such an array of pictures as “Rookies,” “The Fair Co-Ed,” “One Minute to Play,” “Fascinating Youth,” “What’s Your Hurry?”, “Bluebeard’s Eighth Wife,” “Peck’s Bad Boy,” “Prodigal Daughters,” and “The Great Moment.” Out of these successes he prides more the direction of “Rookies” than any other, though, being a rabid football enthusiast, he likes to look back, too, upon the direction of “One Minute to Play,” in which he showed Red Grange just how it should be done.
EDWIN CAREWE has had a long and varied career in the motion picture industry as producer, actor and director. There is little about the production end he is not familiar with and it is not surprising that he has been identified with some of the most successful pictures.

Born in Gainesville, Texas, Carewe was well educated in the public schools in that state and at the Universities of Texas and Missouri. His father was a Chickasaw Indian and their representative in Washington.

Carewe started his professional career with the Dearborn Stock Company in 1902 and spent five months with them in repertoire. For several years following he was with various stock companies before making his first appearance in New York with Chauncey Olcott in "O'Neill of Darcy." Among the famous stage stars in whose support he appeared were Otis Skinner, Rose Coghlan, Laurette Taylor and Weber and Fields.

He then made his first picture, in which he also acted, with Walker Whiteside in "The Typhoon." He was engaged by the Lubin Company for a tour of the world to make pictures as they went. The tour started at Washington and some pictures were made at Fort Meyer. After seven months he returned to Philadelphia and was co-starred with Ormi Hawley in a series of pictures. The first picture of importance in which he appeared was "The Inside of the White Slave Traffic," which created a furore. His first directorial effort was "Across the Pacific" for Blaney Brothers. It was in this picture that Dorothy Dalton made her debut.

For five years Carewe was associated with B. A. Rolfe of the Metro Company. He directed and played the leading role in "Three of Us," with Mabel Taliaferro. A long line of successes followed his advent into the industry as a director. Among these may be mentioned "Madonna of the Streets," "The Bad Man," "Son of the Sahara," "Girl of the Golden West," "Mighty Lak a Rose," and others. His latest efforts were "Resurrection" for Inspiration Pictures and "Ramona" for the same company, both of which star Dolores Del Rio, and are released through United Artists.

He might have succeeded his father as one of the finest china and glassware experts in the world, but the romance of pioneering youth brought him much greater fame and fortune as one of the most successful of motion picture directors. Scion of a wealthy New York family, blessed with a splendid education, he preferred the hard knocks of the motion picture studios in his commendable determination to succeed on his own in a new field. Such is the story of William A. Seiter.

Today he is recognized as one of the leading progressive picture directors by virtue of his long string of Universal productions starring Reginald Denny and Laura La Plante. The recent marriage of the director and the delectable Laura, culminated one of the most popular romances in Hollywood. Their romance began three years ago when he first directed Laura and Reginald Denny in “The Fast Worker.” Later he directed his future wife in such hits as “The Teaser” and “Dangerous Innocence.” Since their marriage this combination has made but one picture together. “Thanks For the Buggy Ride” has just been finished and is said to be their best.

When the director first came to Hollywood thirteen years ago he started at the bottom despite his education. He finally made his debut as a real actor opposite Norma Talmadge. He acted as assistant director of the picture also. Later when the ambitious young man was selected by D. W. Griffith to be co-featured in two-reel romances the screen lost a potential star and gained a director. When he beheld himself for the first time on the screen in the uniform of a royal northwest mounted policeman, he was so disgusted with his acting that he resigned on the spot and went back to directing.

His successful Reginald Denny pictures include “The Fast Worker,” “What Happened To Jones,” “Where Was I?”, “Skinner’s Dress Suit,” “Rolling Home,” “Take It From Me,” “The Cheerful Fraud” and “Out All Night.” To prove his versatility he recently directed a picture without a star, “The Small Bachelor,” the hilarious P. G. Wodehouse story.

HARRY POLLARD, director of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and several notable successes for Universal during the past few years, was once one of the most popular actor stars in motion pictures. Oddly enough, he was the original Uncle Tom in Universal's first picture version of the famous story, which he has now produced as a twelve-reel special. Quite as odd is the fact that Margarita Fischer, who is Mrs. Pollard in private life, and who ably portrays the leading role of Eliza in the present production, was the original Topsy in that same three-reel "epic."

Unlike many other noted picture directors, Harry Pollard's entire life, since boyhood, has been devoted to the art of acting and directing on the stage, and later in motion pictures. Born in Republic City, Kansas, he was raised and educated at Fresno, Cal., which may be called his hometown. He made his debut as an actor in his 'teens in that famous San Francisco stock company, the Alcazar. Another odd fact of Pollard's stage career,—he never played in New York City.

The romance of Harry Pollard and Margarita Fischer began on the stage when they were playing leading roles opposite each other in stock. They entered motion pictures together at the American in Santa Barbara, where they speedily became established screen favorites.

Carl Laemmle recently tendered Pollard a five-year contract establishing him among the leaders, as a reward for his unblemished record of successes. Pollard's productions have ranked among the first ten box office hits for the past five years. This began with the "Leather Pushers" series which started Reginald Denny on the road to fame, and "Sporting Youth," which started Laura La Plante as well. "K-The Unknown" and "The Reckless Age" were next. Then Pollard continued to hit with such Denny opuses as "Oh, Doctor," "I'll Show You the Town" and "California Straight Ahead." His "Poker Faces" was another Laura La Plante success. Perhaps his greatest box office hit was "The Cohens and Kellys."

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" is Harry Pollard's latest achievement.

"Show Boat," that colorful Edna Ferber story of Mississippi river life, will be his next directorial effort.
ERNST LUBITSCH, recognized among the foremost motion picture directors in the world, might now be a good clothing salesman in Berlin if his father had had his way. The elder Lubitsch was a practical and determined man, the proprietor of a clothing store, and he insisted for three years after Ernst’s graduation from school that he clerk in his store.

For three years young Lubitsch clerked, but as he did so during the day he was a student of the drama by night. The first week he was at work he went to Victor Arnold, a famous stage comedian who undertook to teach him the principles of acting. Arnold took Lubitsch to Max Reinhardt, the great stage director of Germany, and the youngster was given a small part. For several years he worked under Reinhardt, learning the technique of acting.

After the first two years he divided his time between the stage and motion pictures, which were just beginning to make themselves felt as competition to the Continental stage. In 1913 Lubitsch did his first picture, appearing in a comedy rôle which made an immediate hit. At the end of a year he was directing his own picture comedies.

In 1918 Lubitsch set to work producing “Carmen,” which later in America was released under the title of “Gypsy Blood.” During the same year he produced what he still considers his greatest picture. It was made as “Madam Du Barry” and released in this country as “Passion.” It was that picture largely, that served eventually to bring both Lubitsch and Pola Negri to America, where they have been extremely popular and successful ever since.

Lubitsch’s first American-made picture was “Rosita” with Mary Pickford. Then followed a long contract with Warner Bros., for whom he made such pictures as “Beau Brummel,” with John Barrymore, “The Marriage Circle,” “Three Women,” “Kiss Me Again,” “Lady Windemer’s Fan” and “So This Is Paris.” For Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer he made “The Student Prince in Old Heidelberg.” He is now with Paramount, where he is engaged with the production of “The Patriot.”

It is quite an achievement to have directed the picture that shattered all weekly records in New York's largest picture palace, but Raoul Walsh is probably prouder to recount the days when he sailed the seven seas as an able seaman or when he rode the range as a Texas cowboy.

There are more drug store cowboys along New York's White Way than there are of the Texas type. Walsh is a New Yorker, raised and educated there in the public schools, but he heard the call of the West in his youth, and he ran away from home to become a Texas cowboy. It was exciting for a while and he became a good puncher, but he tired of it and put out for New Orleans, where he shipped on sailing vessels and steamers that took him to all parts of the world.

Returning eventually to New York, Walsh decided upon a stage career, and it was a very successful one. He played all the leading New York houses, and his parts ranged from heavies to juveniles and leading man.

Naturally, the early days of the movies appealed to him, and he got his first screen work in 1905. His first rôle was that of J. W. Booth in D. W. Griffith's "Birth of a Nation." There followed engagements as an actor and then as a director with Edison, Pathe, Universal, Fox, United Artists and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Eight years ago Mr. Walsh gave up acting to become a director and to do some scenario writing on the side, but he was finally prevailed upon to play the leading rôle opposite Gloria Swanson in the United Artists production, now in the making, "Sadie Thompson," which he is also directing.

Mr. Walsh has directed a number of the screen's greatest successes, his outstanding achievement being the Fox production, "What Price Glory," which smashed to smithereens all records for a single week's showing and for three weeks' showing at the palatial Roxy Theatre in New York. It was he who directed Douglas Fairbanks in "The Thief of Bagdad."
ALBERT ROGELL is one of the youngest successful directors in motion pictures. He is a go-getter and his indomitable will to succeed has brought him success. He is 26 years of age and has been identified with the picture industry in various capacities since he was 18.

There was no good reason why Rogell should have become interested in pictures in the first place. Graduating from the high school at the place of his birth, Oklahoma City, and also from the School of Music, he had had no experience in a business way when he turned his attention to pictures, nor had any member of his family been identified with motion pictures or the theatre.

Just how Rogell landed in Portland, Ore., is not clear, but it was there he got his first picture experience. It was with a company recruited from local stock players, and with the completion of the production he proceeded directly to Hollywood, determined to make a place for himself. Like many others there he found, temporarily, there was no place for him.

Young Rogell stuck to it however, and it was not long before he was a producer, but on the proverbial shoe-string. It was perhaps but natural, coming from Oklahoma, that he should turn his attention to westerns, and he has had a good part of his success with them.

Since his advent into the picture industry there are few angles of it he has not turned his attention to, and consequently he now has a wide knowledge of its many phases. He has been producer, director, scenic artist, grip, transportation department—or what have you.

Rogell has been identified on the production end with Sol Lesser, F B O, Universal and First National. He first filmed a series of short subjects and was successful in selling them. He then directed Fred Thomson and Ken Maynard from the time the latter started. Among his most successful pictures were “The Sunset Derby,” “The Red Raiders,” “Somewhere in Sonora,” “Senor Daredevil” and “The Shepherd of the Hills.”
HERMAN C. RAYMAKER is a native son. He was born and raised in sunny California and has spent practically all of his life there. The peculiar part of his advent into the picture industry is that he broke in through a pact with a girl while the pair were participating in amateur theatricals in high school at Petaluma, California.

Both the girl and Raymaker were ambitious to break into the theatrical or picture profession. So they made a pact that if either succeeded in getting a job he or she would try to help the other do so. Hallie Manning was the girl and it was not a romance. She got a job with the old Kalem in 1915 and made good and proceeded to get Raymaker a job doing stunts.

By dint of hard work and long hours, Raymaker made rapid progress. His first real picture was with Charles Chaplin in "Dough and Dynamite." He was very ambitious and in just a year and one-half he was directing pictures. Among the prominent players he first directed were Charley Murray, Chester Conklin, Mal St. Clair, Eddie Sutherland, Louise Fazenda and Ben Turpin. As a two-reel comedy director he directed Triangles, Hall Room Boys, Baby Peggy, Mack Swain, Hank Mann and Monty Banks. He also made Monty Banks' first feature picture, "Racing Luck," for Associated Exhibitors.

With Warner Bros., Raymaker was very successful. He directed several of the Rin-Tin-Tin starring vehicles, including "Tracked in the Snow Country," "Below the Line," "Heroes of the Big Snow" and "The Night Cry." Others of his Warner pictures were, "His Jazz Bride," "Millionaires," "The Love Hour," "The Gay Old Bird" and "Simple Sis."

Raymaker is back with Monty Banks now, his latest picture being "Flying Luck." And he is preparing another story for the same star. He considers his best picture "The Night Cry," with Rin-Tin-Tin. He says he gets his greatest thrill in life out of every preview when the picture goes over.

Any way you look at it there is at least a grave difference between an undertaker and a motion picture director. Eventually, of course, the twain must meet, but in this instance the undertaker and the director are one and the same. It might be said of Richard Wallace that he has risen from the grave to the heights, for he started as an embalmer, and his latest picture achievement was the direction of the Sam E. Rork production starring Will Rogers in "A Texas Steer."

Wallace took up embalming when he decided to forego a career as an M.D., which professions are much closer allied than those of director and embalmer. Born and educated in Sacramento, Cal., he completed his education as a medical student in Chicago, but quit before graduation to go into the undertaking business in Los Angeles, which he considered the ideal spot.

But he found that business was slow in the southern clime of the Golden State. Motion pictures were a much more live subject with greater opportunities, so he joined the Mack Sennett-Keystone Company as jack-of-all-trades. Directing looked like the best bet to him, so he started to learn everything that led up to it. He soon established himself as one of the best editors in the business.

From editing he went to the business of writing, and he clicked right off the reel with "The Connecticut Yankee," as a result of which he was signed up by Fox and given the chance to direct. His first assignment was a two-reeler and he proved conclusively what he could do if given bigger things. He was not long in getting them and his services were much in demand.

Contracts followed with Universal, Hal Roach, Warner Bros., and First National. After his success with Mabel Normand in "Raggedy Rose," he was asked to direct Corinne Griffith in "Syncopating Sue," and by box-office checkup this was acclaimed one of her best pictures. "McFadden’s Flats" and "The Poor Nut" for First National placed him in the front rank of directors, with the result that Sam E. Rork signed him to direct Will Rogers in "A Texas Steer."

RARELY in the history of the motion picture industry has a sales manager of one of the larger companies switched to scenario writer and producer and made a success of it. That is just what Carey Wilson did. He jumped from sales manager and assistant general manager of Fox Film Corporation to the producing end of the game, and he made good with a bang.

There is a wide difference between selling pictures and making them. There are few men in the industry who can do both. Wilson, from selling pictures, figured he knew just what should go into them to make them more salable, and most of the industry and a large percentage of the exhibitors are ready to admit he was right. He has written and produced pictures that have been eminently satisfactory to some of the leading companies and to thousands of pleased exhibitors.

Wilson says he switched from film salesman to scenario writer just to prove that it could be done. While he has written and produced many pictures, his best-known one is “Ben Hur.” He arose one morning without any thought other than his routine work for the day, but before that night he started on a 13,000-mile jaunt which landed him in Italy to do the scenario for “Ben Hur.” He had just six hours’ notice to make the trip, and the results of the venture are best attested by the manner in which the picture is being received now in theatres throughout the world.

Proud as he is of “Ben Hur,” he declares his best picture to date was “His Secretary,” with Norma Shearer. It more clearly reflected just his idea of what a motion picture should be than any he has made. Among his other successful efforts are “Helen of Troy,” “The Stolen Bride,” “Naughty But Nice,” “American Beauty,” “Nellie, the Beautiful Cloak Model,” “He Who Gets Slapped,” “Light of Old Broadway,” “The Masked Bride,” “Soul Mates,” “The Sporting Lover,” and scores of others.

Wilson was born and educated in Philadelphia. After graduating from high school he attended the Industrial Art School of Philadelphia. He served as sales manager for both Fox and First National before he went into the production end of the industry.

Paul Leni, noted first as a German director, and more recently as a director of big pictures for Universal, was literally forced into becoming a director, because his work as a "film architect" in arranging prologues for German-made pictures was declared by critics and those in the picture profession too artistic for the feature pictures. Critics said of him that the decoration predominated the film so much that presentation and action were entirely overshadowed. A stage manager over him was deemed necessary. Director E. A. Dupont found a suitable place for the painter, Paul Leni, and the two produced such great successes as "The White Peacock," "The Green Manuela," "Children of the Darkness," "The Ancient Law," "Murder Without a Murder," and others.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, on a visit to Europe, was attracted to Leni's art. He invited him to come to America and produce the prologues for Universal productions. It was quite natural that the genius of Leni would not long be satisfied with the settings of prologues, and it was just as natural that Laemmle would not be long in giving him his opportunity to develop in the American film his unique decorative talent.

In a short time Leni was directing Universal pictures, which had an immediate inspiring effect on American film architecture. He produced "The Cat and the Canary," which has proven a sensation wherever shown. He then completed "The Chinese Parrot," which was a revelation to the critics. The director's latest is "The Man Who Laughs." It is said it excels anything he has done before, which is considerable praise.

Leni is married to one of the best-known German dancers, Lore Sello, who founded in Europe a distinguished school of the dance in which she, through her own method of training and dancing, has taught the youth of Berlin the "way to strength and beauty."

The Leni home in Hollywood is the center of filmdom's literary and artistic circles, and is becoming famous for its wealth of art treasures.
TWENTY years ago, Robert F. Hill, now noted motion picture director, started on his professional career in the somewhat lowly capacity of dresser for Vaughan Glaser, general manager, producer and star of the Vaughan Glaser Stock Company. Seven years later Hill was Glaser's stage director and heavy man of the same stock company. During his career on the speaking stage he participated in such well-known plays as "Alias Jimmy Valentine," "The College Widow," "Old Heidelberg," "When Knighthood Was in Flower," and scores of others.

Hill gained considerable fame in a hero rôle off the stage in 1915, when he saved Mary Fuller, prominent as a reigning picture star, from a watery grave at Gloucester, Mass. He plunged into a rough sea and was himself caught in a series of combers, but succeeded in bringing the all but unconscious Miss Fuller safely to shore.

Hill is prominent and popular among the clubmen of Hollywood. He is a member of the Masonic order, of the Breakers, the 233 Club, and the Rainbow Trout Club. He is also one of the regular customers at Pasadena when the football season is in progress. He had a fling at auto salesmanship during a lull in his professional career, but as an auto salesman he was a good writer and motion picture director. He prefers his office at the Universal studio.

FRANK CAPRA, motion picture director, got a good break when he returned from service in the army following the war. He exhausted every channel through which he might get work as a chemical engineer in which he had a college degree, and he was hungry and without funds. So he started to write. It was a precarious undertaking for a hungry man, but he sold a couple of stories, and so started in pictures as a writer. And he has doubtless had a greater success in pictures than he could have achieved as a chemical engineer.

It was no easy task, this writing for the screen for the very smallest of the independent companies, but Capra stuck to it and made fair success of it until he was graduated to a director. Since properly striking his stride he has been with Mack Sennett, Hal Roach, F B O and First National. His most successful pictures to date are "The Strong Man," "Long Pants," and "For the Love of Mike."

Capra is a native of Italy, but his family moved from there to Hollywood when he was a youth, so he got his education in the grade and high schools in Los Angeles, and then graduated from the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena. This looked fairly rosy for him up to the time he went into the service. His father was noted as a church singer, and there was every prospect that he would launch on a successful career as a chemical engineer.

His return from war and his unsuccessful hunt for work had him completely discouraged for a time. It is hard for him to explain to this day how he conceived the idea of writing for the screen. But he figured that he must eat and he put everything he had in his first stories. They did not bring him much in the way of financial returns, but they fired him with a new ambition, and his persistency carried him through to success. Lately he has been most successful, and he figures he has now just fairly hit his stride. Indications are that in the future he will accomplish even bigger things in the motion picture industry than he has in the past.

BRUCE MITCHELL, one of the foremost of the Universal directors, seems to have had a varied career before finally alighting in the midst of the Hollywood film industry. There are many things he might have done, but he is reluctant to express them. Just now he is interested in making good pictures and it is conceded he is having a fair amount of success.

Mitchell does not talk much of how he broke into the picture game. As a matter of fact, he had no such inclination when he was a youngster, nor did his parents lay out such a career for him. As a matter of fact, they got him an appointment to the Annapolis Naval Academy from his home town, Freeport, Illinois, and he got a good part of his education there.

Whether Mitchell had a distaste for the navy is not known, but the fact remains that he next bobbed up as a full-fledged civil engineer and he spent some little time in that profession. It's quite a hurdle from civil engineer to the theatrical profession, but Mitchell made it and landed with the Denver Stock Company, where for a full year he saw service in the variety of roles that go with the weekly change of bills. He got a lot of good experience in Denver and by it he has profited handsomely as a director.

It was in 1912 that Mitchell launched on his screen career and he chose the acting end of the profession. He recalls his first picture as one in which he played the heavy with Bob Leonard, but the title has escaped him. From Universal, he went with the American Film Company and with Thomas H. Ince, and is now back again with Universal.

In the course of his long career Mitchell has made a number of highly successful photoplays, but he considers his best "Love's Whirlpool." Close to that he regards as his best "Three Miles Up" and "The Air Patrol." Others of his successes have been too numerous to recount.

Mitchell is an enthusiastic Mason and a member of the 233 Club. He spends much of his spare time when away from the studio at fishing and hunting.
Joseph Franklin Poland sold his first story to a moving picture company when he was still a freshman at Columbia University. The writing bug stung him severely at this point, and the dust has never yet been wiped from his law books.

After selling some sixty-odd one-and two-reelers, written at night while he worked in Wall Street during the day, Poland joined the old Kalem Company as staff writer. Following this came staff positions with Vitagraph, Fox and Metro, all in New York. At the end of several years of this work he began to chafe at the routine work of adaptation, where his creative ability was, if not submerged, at least kept in a conventional rut. So he gave up the regular stipend that went with staff work and took to writing originals.

Within a period of fourteen months he had his name on seventeen original feature productions, produced by every company then in business. From this period on Poland grew with the screen comedy, and in a measure, to which he contributed, screen comedy grew with him. He left New York to take a position with Thomas H. Ince, and during his two and a half years with Ince, Poland wrote for Douglas MacLean and other stars, and learned much from that master producer. Following this he wrote a number of comedies and comedy-dramas for the Fox productions. Then he wrote two of Colleen Moore's successes during that first year when she blossomed out as a big box-office attraction—"The Perfect Flapper" and "Flirting With Love."

After this, Poland furnished Douglas MacLean with two of the year's mirth-provoking releases—"That's My Baby" and "Hold That Lion."

It was at this point that the Universal Company, seeking a man who could supervise the getting into production of some thirty feature comedies a year, asked Poland to take the job. Poland took it finally. And out of his first year's work on that job has come what Carl Laemmle and Universal proudly point to as the most consistent line-up of feature comedies the company has ever presented.

Perseverance and the keenest desire to learn every phase of his business is what landed Leon d’Ussean near the top of his profession. Where others were satisfied to master the particular angle in which they intended to specialize, d’Ussean wanted to know the why and wherefore of production. That is why he is now supervisor of production at the FBO studios and assistant to William Le Baron, in charge of production.

Prior to his arrival in Hollywood in 1915, d’Ussean had been, first, an actor on the stage and then a newspaper reporter. From this he worked into the publicity and exploitation field and then into a partnership which controlled six theatres, showing, variously, road plays, vaudeville and pictures.

These experiences gave him a wide knowledge of everything but the production end, and that was the particular end to which he aspired. His first job in the picture studios was that of property man. Having studied art in New York, the evidence of which showed in his dressing of sets, he was quickly given the responsibility of designing and dressing settings. He gained prominence, as a result, by being among the first in the industry to receive screen credit as an art director.

After a year of this, in which he was making rapid advancement, d’Ussean deliberately gave it up to become an assistant director, which he considered a step nearer to his goal. He was not long satisfied as assistant director, so in steady succession he took up cutting, title writing, continuities and original script, establishing himself firmly in each branch.

Then for two years he devoted himself to the assignment of scenario editor, which he gave up to become a director. He made three pictures before William Le Baron took him into the Famous Players’ Astoria studio. When Le Baron withdrew from Famous to become production chief for FBO, he took d’Ussean with him and made him his assistant. In addition he is one of the company’s three supervisors. He is still a keen student of everything that has to do with production, and it is freely predicted around the studios that his progress in the future will be even more rapid than it has been in the past.

C. GRAHAM BAKER, once a special writer and cartoonist on the New York dailies, was told by J. Stuart Blackton, of the Vitagraph Company, that the industry was in need of stories. Baker wrote five comedies, sent them in and collected his check. Since that day, some twelve years ago, Baker has been prominently identified with the industry.

For two years he wrote a comedy a week for Larry Semon; many of the Sidney Drew comedies; from that branching into the writing of serials when they were becoming popular.

When George Randolph Chester, editor of the Vitagraph, turned his attention to directing, Baker was placed in entire charge of the story department, purchasing and adapting material for such stars as Corinne Griffith, Alice Joyce, Bessie Love, Earl Williams and others.

Baker left Vitagraph four years ago, allying himself with the Fox Company, writing several features. From there he moved to the Inspiration Pictures, where he adapted several stories for Richard Barthelmess.

Going to California, he wrote a picture for Universal and then accepted a long-term contract at Warner Bros.

The groundwork of practical knowledge of the needs of the industry was gained in the early days, augmented by the fact that he had directed more than twenty pictures, and during his last days at the Vitagraph, edited and titled all of that company's product. Among these were such pictures as “Captain Blood,” “The Clean Heart,” “Pioneer Trails,” and others.

For Inspiration he wrote “The Beautiful City” and “Just Suppose.” For Vitagraph, “Captain Blood,” “Pioneer Trails,” “The Fortune Hunter,” “Pampered Youth,” “Masters of Men,” and others almost too numerous to mention.

Baker is a native of Indiana, but has spent most of his years in New York City.

An isolated childhood spent on an island at Squirrel Lake, Wis., did not hamper Winifred Dunn in her ambition to become a writer. Squirrel Lake is far removed from Hollywood, but Miss Dunn makes her home at the latter place now and is one of the leading scenarists out that way.

At the early age of six Miss Dunn made up her mind to be a writer, as she was related to a family of writers on her mother’s side, and she also boasts a long line of British barristers and statesmen on her father’s side, among them Lord Charles Russell, Chief Justice of England from 1894 to 1900.

There are few fictionists of any description who are fortunate enough to have their initial effort accepted, but Miss Dunn is one of these. She submitted a story to the Selig Polyscope Company, and it was promptly accepted, as were others that followed.

Miss Dunn was then seized with the urge to reform the world, via the screen, and wrote “And the Children Pay.” It stirred several prominent Chicago reformers and they organized a company to produce it. After she wrote “The Red Viper,” an Americanization picture endorsed by the late Theodore Roosevelt, she discovered that the world did not want to be reformed, so she engaged in editing discarded pictures, transferring them from shelf to screen.

Following that Miss Dunn went to the Coast with Sawyer & Lubin as feature writer, then to Robertson-Cole, writing for Pauline Frederick. Her real success started when she joined the old Metro studios as scenario editor and title writer, writing scripts and titles for such pictures as “The Eagle’s Feather,” “Along Came Ruth,” “The Man Life Passed By,” “Happiness,” “The Beauty Prize,” and “The Shooting of Dan McGrew.”

An engagement with Mary Pickford followed, where she wrote “Sparrows.” Then came “Twinkletoes” for Colleen Moore, “Lonesome Ladies” for Louis Stone and Anna Q. Nilsson, “The Drop Kick” and “The Patent Leather Kid” for Richard Barthelmess. She is free-lancing now and her services are much in demand.

There are few screen writers qualified to handle as wide a range of screen subjects as is Finis Fox, who for the past ten years has been preparing stories for the screen. He is a rare combination of business man, newspaper man, adventurer and state legislator, and withal he succeeded in acquiring a college education.

The career of Mr. Fox has been a colorful one. Born and raised in Oklahoma he ran up against many of the rough edges of life in his youth, and he has been studying life ever since. He had four years of college and university training after returning from the Spanish-American War, in which he served at the age of fifteen. He was a newspaper editor at nineteen and a state legislator at twenty-one.

When Mr. Fox decided to enter the motion picture industry as a writer he had a world of confidence in himself, for he gave up a lucrative position as general manager of a national manufacturing company. He is a mixture of Scotch, Irish and English stock, with a pronounced strain of Chickasaw Indian blood. And that type perseveres.

He was not long in gaining success as a screen writer, and he has contributed many stories from which some of the best pictures have been made. In his ten years of screen endeavor he has written original stories, adaptations and screen plays for more than fifty leading screen stars.

Among the most recent cinema successes contributed by Mr. Fox were "Resurrection" and "Ramona," starring Dolores Del Rio, and released by United Artists. While he has confined his time largely to the writing of plays for the screen, he has also directed and produced six pictures. Among these was "A Woman Who Sinned," with Mae Busch, Irene Rich and Rex Lease, which was acclaimed by press and exhibitors as a dramatic sensation.

Mr. Fox has two brothers well known as motion picture directors. They are Edwin Carewe and Wallace Fox. He is happily married and is a devotee of such sports as tennis, swimming, riding and fishing.

Combination in pictures have come to be very popular within a comparatively recent time, but there is one combination that has enjoyed popularity for a number of years. They are Mr. and Mrs. John S. Robertson, director and scenarist, respectively.

Mrs. Robertson is Josephine Lovett on the screen. She has a long string of successes to her credit, and about all of them have been directed by her husband. She is very ambitious, is Miss Lovett. Despite her success she is not yet satisfied with her work for the screen. Asked what was her greatest picture, she promptly retorted, "I haven't done it yet." Which is characteristic of Miss Lovett.

There are few screen writers who have a better foundation in the art than Miss Lovett. She has always been a writer of exceptional merit and she has been well educated in the drama. Miss Lovett was an actress of note before she took up scenario work as a vocation. She knows her drama and dramatic values.

Miss Lovett on the legitimate stage played with some of the leading stars and in worthwhile plays that will long be remembered. She started her career after graduation from Sargent's Dramatic School in New York, and she then appeared in such plays as "Heartsease," with Henry Miller, "The Lion and the Mouse," "Her Husband's Wife," "Where the Trail Divides," and with Grace George in repertoire.

It was with Famous Players-Lasky that Miss Lovett started her screen work when she wrote the adaptation for "Sentimental Tommy." In addition to Famous she has written for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Inspiration and other companies. Among her other successes are "Footlights," "The Spanish Jade," "Tess of the Storm Country," "Classmates," "Enchanted Cottage," "Annie Laurie," "The Bugle Call," "The Road to Romance," "The Ordeal," and "Soul Fire."

Miss Lovett is prominently identified with The Writers and the M. P. Academy of Arts and Sciences. She was born in San Francisco, but made her home in New York until she again heard the call of the West, and took up her residence in Los Angeles.

EDITORIAL departments of newspaper offices throughout the country have graduated many brilliant writers who subsequently made names for themselves in the motion picture industry. Some of them have become title writers, others scenarists, and still others successful directors.

Alfred A. Cohn is a scenario writer and a good one, as a list of his contributions to the screen will show. He was also a good newspaper man before his advent to Hollywood. He got his start early in a newspaper office in Freeport, Ill., and he went right through the mill. That is, he served in every editorial capacity there is in a newspaper office. He started at the early age of fifteen years, and he was one of the roving type of reporters and editors who worked in many different parts of the country.

Cohn got his first touch of motion picture work as associate editor of Photoplay Magazine in 1915, and then during the war period he served as publicity director for Mary Pickford. It was a comparatively short step from writing publicity to writing scenarios, and he made the hurdle easily.

As he had wandered about the newspaper offices so he wandered about the studios. He worked for many companies, among them M-G-M, First National, P. D. C., Universal and Warner Bros. Among his scenarios are many that have clicked merrily at the box-offices of thousands of theatres. Some of these that might be mentioned are: "Friendly Enemies," "His People," "The Cohens and the Kellys," "Frisco Sally Levy," "The Cat and the Canary," "The Midnight Kiss," "The Jazz Singer," "The Cohens and the Kellys in Paris," "The Gorilla," "We Americans," and "The Last Warning." He is now specializing on the characterization comedy and mystery type of stories.

Cohn is interested in everything that has to do with writing, and has done much for the organization of writers in Hollywood. He was one of the founders of the Writers' Club in Hollywood, and for several years was a director of the Screen Writers' Guild of the Authors League of America.

THE screen almost lost one of its most prolific writers when in the course of his duty back in the early days of Vitagraph, George H. Plympton was directing a three-reel picture in which the New York City fire department participated. He got tangled in a crash while riding to fires on the apparatus and escaped only through a miracle.

Plympton is what might be termed a writing veteran of the film industry, for he did his first picture for Vitagraph in 1914. It was a story for Norma Talmadge, and was titled "Miser Murray's Wedding Present." That effort followed a career as short story and newspaper writer, and Plympton has done little since but write and adapt stories for the screen.

He remained with Vitagraph for four years, writing for John Bunny, Sidney Drew and many of Vitagraph's earliest successes. He adapted the Alfred Henry Lewis "Wolfville" series and also many of the O. Henry series.

Since departing from Vitagraph, Plympton has written stories and adaptations for Metro, Famous, Pathe and Universal. He is now and for some time has been under contract to Universal. Looking back over his long career, Plympton points with pride to the two Universal Collegian series, which he adapted, as his best work. He has adapted many westerns, among them "Hard Fists," "Smilin' Sam," "Hands Off," "The Stolen Ranch," "Flashing Hoofs," "Desert Dust" (an original), and others. He also wrote the adaptations for the Arthur Lake series of comedies for Universal.

Plympton is a native of Brooklyn, and got his education there in the public schools. His original intention was to become an electrical engineer, but he got dabbling with fiction and sold a number of original stories to Vitagraph, which brought him his first picture contract. He came naturally by his ability as a writer, as his father, Dr. Harry Plympton, was also a very successful writer of fiction.

The younger Plympton served during the World War and is a member of the American Legion. He is also a member of the Writers' Club in Los Angeles.

Biographical Sketch

ELIZABETH PICKETT, short subject director, scenario and title writer, took a peculiar course to the screen as a profession. She went via the American Red Cross in Washington, D. C., to Hollywood. A graduate of Wellesley College with the class of 1918, and with an A. B. degree in liberal arts, she took up work as historian with the Red Cross in Washington. She wrote “The History of Red Cross Nursing” and “The Primer of the American Red Cross.”

While engaged in that work Miss Pickett became interested in the propaganda pictures the Red Cross was making, and was transferred at National headquarters to that bureau of the relief organization. Her first experience was in the making of a one-reel picture entitled “In Florence Nightingale’s Footsteps,” which was designed to attract women into service as war nurses.

It was a comparatively low hurdle from the Red Cross Bureau of Motion Pictures to the William Fox lot, and since she took the jump Miss Pickett has had more than her share of success. There have been few women who have been considered competent enough all-around to direct pictures and write scenario and titles.

The short subject field requires a wide variety of knowledge and a keen sense of humor. Miss Pickett has both. She has directed, edited and titled over fifty of the Fox Varieties, and between times she has made other contributions to the screen. Among these she adapted and titled “Kentucky Pride,” “Wings of the Storm,” and “The Monkey Talks.” She also wrote “Wolf Fangs” and “Navajo.”

Though Miss Pickett has had little leisure time since her graduation from Wellesley College she has managed to crowd into her life some thrilling incidents. Not the least of these was a narrow escape from a bed of quicksand. She also boasts of having been driven out of Indian villages and of having been arrested in Virginia for shooting on Sunday. Her favorite recreation now is riding horseback. She spends much of her time when in New York at the Town Hall Club, of which she is a member.

BESS MEREDYTH, recognized as one of the greatest of scenario writers, started out in life to be a concert pianist. At present she is credited with a large number of leading screen successes.

After working on a newspaper in Buffalo, Miss Meredith, who had been making an intensive study of music, made a concert tour throughout the United States which took her to Los Angeles. And there she started the career which took her entirely out of music and brought her fame and fortune.

Motion pictures were just beginning to assert themselves in and about Hollywood and Miss Meredith decided to abandon her tour for a short while in order that she might spend the winter in California. She never resumed it.

She played extra parts with the Biograph company in scenes with Mary Pickford; the Gishes; Blanche Sweet and all the others of Griffith fame.

She then went to the Universal company to play leads and was eventually made a star with that company. All the same she was picking up experience which she knew she could capitalize later.

Her real ambition was to become a screen writer and while starring she wrote many original stories that were bought and produced.

Then she went into the scenario department, writing originals and continuities and was very successful from the start.

During the past five years she has reached the top of the screen writing profession and among her notable achievements are the adaptations and scenarios on "Don Juan," "The Sea Beast," and "When a Man Loves," for John Barrymore, "The Noose" for Richard Barthelmess and the collaboration on the scenario of "Ben Hur." Among others of her successes were "Strangers of the Night," "The Famous Mrs. Fair," "The Dangerous Age," "One Clear Call," "The Grim Comedian," "Ladies Must Live," "The Magic Flame," "Rose of the Golden West," "A Slave of Fashion."

Miss Meredith was born and educated in Buffalo, N. Y., and for some years she has not regretted that she gave up her musical career.

AL BOASBERG had a yen for writing from the time of his graduation from the Buffalo High School, so he became a writer. His natural bent was toward theatricals, and he entered that field after he had tried out several jobs not to his liking in Buffalo. He took in all of the leading shows that visited his hometown and then decided he too would be the author of a play.

Becoming a successful author is difficult for any one, and is usually attained only after a lot of hard knocks. Al took the knocks and plodded on. The going was very tough in spots, but he could not be stopped. He was determined to contribute to a Broadway success, and he made good on his determination.

It was not until 1924 that Boasberg really got fairly under way, and he has been taking on added momentum ever since then. In that year he became co-author of the Music Box Review, which was a tremendous success in New York. He did so well that first year that he was co-author of the same review the following year.

Boasberg became well known around Broadway as a result of his contribution to the Music Box Review, and there was plenty of work for him in the way of writing. He took a fling at vaudeville, and wrote a number of successful sketches for some of vaudeville’s headliners. He was all set in the theatrical game, but he wanted to write for the movies, so he did just that.

It required a lot of patience and a lot of perseverance, but Boasberg had both, and he landed with Buster Keaton when the latter was making “Battling Butler.” Al contributed a lot of comedy gags that were all good for laughs, and he has been providing laughs on the screen ever since.

Boasberg’s services are much in demand in Hollywood, where he is well known and popular. He is active there with the Masons and Elks, and is a member of the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences. He describes his favorite sport as that of matching pennies.

One of the most meteoric rises in the screen-writing ranks is that of Howard J. Green, who has been hitting the bull's-eye with amazing consistency, though in Hollywood slightly more than a year.

Even while Green was attending Hasting's Law College in San Francisco he was writing for the world of make-believe. It was in those days that he penned several musical comedies which were given local production, causing him to give up law for newspaper reporting. Like most of the Fourth Estate he bounced from one city to another, and finally found himself near the theatre again when he joined the staff of the New York Clipper. After serving in the war he was managing editor of Theatre World.

This gave Green the urge to do theatrical writing again, and the Keith and Orpheum vaudeville programs started billing his name when he wrote special material for such stars as Marie Cahill, Anna Chandler and Harry Fox, as well as sketches for the Garrick Gaieties and the Greenwich Village Follies. Later, as a member of the vaudeville producing firm of Hocky & Green, he wrote and directed innumerable headline acts for the “big time.”

It was Johnny Hines who suggested to Green to turn his hand to screen writing, and, as comedy constructor for “The Brown Derby,” he made his picture debut. Next he was claimed by Harold Lloyd, receiving screen credit on “The Kid Brother,” after which he joined the First National ranks. As comedy constructor of “The Patent Leather Kid” and “The Private Life of Helen of Troy,” and as the adapter of “White Pants Willie” and “The Life of Riley,” he has gained high recognition as a writer of comedy.

Green’s latest assignment is an original story for Charlie Murray and George Sidney, to be produced by First National.

Though Green’s rise has been rapid, and though he is credited with several successes, he does not feel that he has risen to the heights yet. Asked to name his best story for the screen, he smiles cynically and promptly volunteers the information that he has not yet written it.

Ideas for Building
Ideas for Decorating
Ideas for Equipping

All this and much other valuable information is presented twice a year in the issues of Theatre Building and Equipment Buyers Guide, and each month in "The Showman" section of Motion Picture News.

In these special theatre numbers, contributions by authorities of highest standing in their respective fields, give you the benefit of their experience and keep you in touch with the most approved methods of theatre operation and construction.

And through the advertising pages of these theatre numbers, leading manufacturers tell you about the latest developments in theatre equipment.

Be sure that you read and keep as a reference each of these special numbers of Motion Picture News. They will be of invaluable help when you build your new theatre or remodel your old house.
